(San Diego, CA) Spring 2017 - The Fusenot Foundation, a California based 501(c)3 foundation was honored by the San Diego Center for Economics Education (SDCEE) with the naming of the organization's annual award to "Fusenot Foundation and SDCEE Economics History Day Awards". The dedication coincided with the 2017 National History Day Contest in San Diego.

"It is with great pleasure to inform you that in gratitude of the Fusenot Foundation's many years of loyal, financial support we bestow this dedication. You should be proud of the impact your foundation is making today . . . and in the future of our children," announced SDCEE Board Member, Rohn S. Trieglaff, CLU, CHRS®, AIF®. "As a long-time benefactor to SDCEE, we are able to continue our work in advancing the economic literacy of the people of California through economic-based programs targeted at teachers and students of Kindergarten through 12th grade, educating them about the fundamentals of the economy and instilling in them an economic way of thinking and problem solving prudent to their participation in a global economy."

"The Fusenot Foundation is honored by the dedication," states Guy Stone, Fusenot Foundation Chairman and Trustee. "Programs such as these are analogous with our mission, To enrich the lives and lifestyle of Californians... Empowering our youth through education and economic knowledge will ensure growth and goodwill well into the future."

As part of History Day, students compete by preparing detailed projects on the topic of economic impact. A portion of the Fusenot Foundation grant is earmarked to be distributed as cash awards to the top four students for their endeavors.

Trieglaff explains, "The award is presented to a few students who have gone up and beyond preparing for their National History Day project and presentation. They have researched the economic aspects within their historical project. And, prepared themselves to discuss with the judges how economics impacted and played an integral part in their project."
